Once upon a time, you might have stashed your cash in a coffee can or maybe under the mattress...but we've come a long way since then. In fact, given the complexities of savings, investing, taxes and accounting, managing finances has become somewhat of a foreign language. Fortunately, there are interpreters: experienced individuals passionate about the field, dedicated to serving their clients and adept at navigating the world of finance.

They work tirelessly to improve their firms, their specializations and their communities, growing their clients' money, peace of mind and financial intelligence along the way.

After an extensive online voting process, we've narrowed down a few leaders in specific disciplines who exemplify quality in their professions and communities.

Being able to recognize and understand a problem from both sides of the table is often the easiest way to formulate a solution. Unfortunately, often times even the savviest negotiators only have experience from their respective side of the deal. As firm-wide partner-in-charge of tax and business services at Marcum LLP, Joseph J. Perry offers a firsthand business perspective.

He serves as the chairman of Dime Community Bancshares' risk committee and as a member of its audit and compensation committees. This business acumen makes him distinctly qualified to provide business accounting services to his clients, which include publicly traded and closely held companies with local, national and international operations.

Perry has considerable experience with individual and corporate taxation, accounting for income taxes, compensation, and mergers and acquisitions. Since joining Marcum in 2002, he has been devoted to sharing the knowledge gained over a 20-year career. Perry is a founding member of Marcum University, an award-winning, in-house training division of the firm. He has also provided his insight to numerous publications, including The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times.
